I felt led to knock on the door and to ask him if he would like a short visit. Williford's interest mirrors a focus of many assisted living, memory care and nursing facilities across the country: honoring their senior residents who are veterans.

One of the big differences in caring for aging patients at the VA rather than in a nursing home is that, instead of simply discussing what they endured on D-Day, we mapped their service experiences from start to finish, from basic training to the end of the war. PACT was introduced into VHA in and reflects the same attention to health education, the role of the home and family, and prevention of future problems that is a hallmark of geriatrics.

Describe what you see when you look around name the place where you are, the curriculum the end, we decided to tell the larger story of D-Day by zooming in on four individual stories.
