The logical consequence would be that there is no real purpose for life, and there is no life after death. It is assumed that if it gives us the best numbers, it must be the best choice or behavior.

It lists several passages in which Eternal Life is referenced in the New Testament.

James Rosscup writes that "This is the best older, overall treatment of a critical nature on the Old Testament Hebrew text verse by verse and is a good standard work to buy. I do not wonder that Adam Clarke still stands, notwithstanding his peculiarities, a prince among commentators.

If one person was late, the whole defense was punished. But it's not navel-gazing. How much are you going to let someone pull you down?
