IwanttostartbyrecognizingthatsomepoorBabylon5sapwhodoesn'tevenlik is a far better debater than most of political writers, when he make a statement of fact he backs it up with facts easily check-able from public records, No made up stats or citing other pundits who agree with him, or research from questionable sources. His arguments are actually pretty good - I didn't learn a whole lot of new things from the book largely because I'm already plugged into some of the not-so-nutty conservative blogosphere, and read National Review.
